

Australian University Heads of English Submission to the Senate Inquiry into the Australian Research Council Amendment (Ensuring Research Independence) Bill 2018

Background

The Australian University Heads of English (AUHE) is a peak body that draws together representatives from English departments at more than thirty universities as well as major literary associations. The AUHE coordinates with leaders in the discipline to form strategies for the future of literary studies in Australia. This includes the all-important relationship between English in secondary and tertiary education, as well as quality assurance, curriculum design, pedagogic strategies, and matters related to funding and supporting research.

The Acting Minister of Education's recent decision to refuse six Discovery Project grants recommended to him has had a direct and disproportionate effect on Literary Studies research. The AUHE has grave concerns about this outcome, which appears to be based on short-term political considerations. Only 70% of recommended grants in literary studies were approved in the DP22 round (9 out of 13) as against 98.9% of projects overall. On average, it is nearly thirty times more likely that a grant in literary studies will be refused than for other fields of research. The Acting Minister's decisions deepened AUHE's concerns about the Government's regard for research in literary studies: in 2018, three of the eleven grants refused by the former Education Minister Simon Birmingham were in literary studies. The high proportion of literary projects denied funding points to a significant decline in research investment and yet international ranking systems (QS and THE) continue to number Australian English departments amongst the best in the world. In the Federal Government's ERA ratings, 17 Australian universities achieved "at world standard", "above world standard" and "well above world standard" outcomes in the Literary Studies code (2005) in 2018.

Research-based teaching of literature is a keystone of Australia's world-class university sector. Scholars in the field train future teachers, writers, media workers, publishers, professionals, business people, politicians, and engaged citizens. Academic studies of literature serve to orient our understanding of our own society and other societies with which we are necessarily in open and ongoing conversation. Insights into the capacities and effects of language have shaped our culture and how we communicate with, influence and persuade one another. English, alongside Mathematics, is a compulsory course in primary and secondary education, and it is a pillar of our education system. Sophisticated literacy skills underpin Australia's future success and its ability to meet the UN Sustainability Goals. When grants are refused that will engage new generations of students in innovative ways with literary works - from Shakespeare to popular fiction as occurred in this round - Australian students, teachers, and researchers fall behind.

Literature is a mainstay of the creative and cultural industries, which contributed $63.5 billion to the Australian economy in 2016-17. As the novelist Gail Jones commented in her submission to the 2020 parliamentary inquiry into Australia's creative and cultural industries and institutions, creative arts employ 645,000 Australians and those numbers were increasing before the pandemic. Literature operates in the economy in many nuanced ways, since writers are “primary producers” of creative content. Books provide a bedrock of innovation for areas such as film, television, theatre and opera; moreover they contribute fundamentally to the educational sector and to libraries, events and key national debates about Australian culture and identity. Science Fiction narratives have driven technological innovation while raising fundamental ethical questions about new technologies. When grants that seek to understand Science Fiction are refused, as occurred in this round, the Australian economy misses out.

In response to the Acting Minister's repudiation of literary studies grants, members of the AUHE wrote and circulated a statement condemning the funding decisions. It called on the Minister to reinstate the defunded projects and to commit to legislating the independence of the ARC. The statement has been signed by over 2,000 leading writers, academics, and public supporters in Australia and across the world, including Australia's only living Nobel Laureate in literature, J. M. Coetzee, and three winners of the Miles Franklin Award, Alexis Wright, Michelle de Kretser, and Amanda Lohrey (see Appendix below for the full list). It has been endorsed by the Modern Languages Association, the world's largest literary association, as well as the major literary studies organisations in Australia. The groundswell of support shows that our literary culture is cherished and is regarded as an essential public good.

Ensuring Research Integrity

In his State of the University address in February this year, the Nobel Laureate and ANU Vice Chancellor Brian Schmidt characterised the capacity for Ministers directly to interfere in research funding as “an existential threat to Australian universities”. Colleagues from all disciplines and across the world supported the AUHE statement as they likewise understood that interference undermines the core purpose of universities as autonomous institutions dedicated to the pursuit of truth and new knowledge. We stress that this autonomy is crucial to the capacity for universities to serve the public good. When researchers can freely apply themselves to the most challenging problems without fear of censorship or interference, it yields the ideas and solutions that allow society to meet challenges of the scale of climate change and spiralling global inequality.

When the Acting Minister refused the ARC's recommendations for funding, he undermined the ARC's rigorous grant funding process, which includes the expertise of assessors and members of the College of Experts. The rejection of these recommended projects was based on their failure to meet, in the minister's opinion, the national interest test (NIT). However, as the Senate Estimates of 17 February made clear, the Acting Minister did not have access to full applications, nor is it clear what criteria were used to determine how or why these projects did not meet the requirements of the NIT. This arbitrary refusal of grants points to the need for fundamental reform of the ARC act and comprehensive legal protections for academic freedom and expertise. One aspect of legislative reform required would be to develop an Australian version of what is referred to as the ‘Haldane’ principle in the United Kingdom: a mechanism for ensuring that the government’s provision of funds for research is kept entirely separate from decisions about how those funds are spent.

In comparable higher education systems in the USA, United Kingdom, and Canada, it is recognised by all sides of politics that the public benefits, including economic, of scholarly research are compromised when politicians make decisions about funding with disregard to independent peer-review processes. In the United Kingdom, the Haldane Principle was enshrined by the Conservative government in UK law in the Higher Education and Research Act 2017. The rationale for this amendment to the Act was to protect basic scientific research in the context of an ambitious industrial strategy that aimed to increase productivity by raising the UK’s investment in R&D to 2.7 per cent of GDP by 2027. The law stipulated that the Government can give UK Research and Innovation larger scale strategic directions about the allocation or expenditure of grants received, but decisions at the level of individual research proposals should be left to expert peer review.

Australia finds itself at a similar crisis point in research funding strategy that requires clear definitions of the enduring value of basic research across HASS and STEMM fields and robust protection of peer review processes that are fundamental to the international standing of both the ARC and the NHMRC.

Recommendations

- Amend the Australian Research Council Act 2001 and National Health and Medical Research Council Act 1992 to give ultimate decision-making power for allocating research funds directly to the respective research councils.
- Align the ARC and NHMRC Acts to ensure that protections for academic autonomy, academic freedom, and expertise in matters of research are protected equally across the research sector.
- Abolish the National Interest Test and limit the Minister’s capacity to veto funding decisions made by the ARC and NHMRC to proven breaches of process as outlined in their respective Acts.

Appendix: Statement Regarding the Refusal of Literary Studies ARC Grants

The decision by the acting Federal Minister for Education, Stuart Robert, to exercise his veto against four literary studies grants recommended to him by the Australian Research Council constitutes an attack on literary studies and literary culture in Australia. The only public justification that Robert provided for the apparently arbitrary process that led to this decision is that the projects “do not demonstrate value for taxpayers’ money nor contribute to the national interest.” That two-thirds of the six censored grants should be in literary studies demonstrates a dismissive attitude to the value of the imagination and creativity.

Nor is this an isolated occurrence. Four years ago, the former education minister Simon Birmingham rejected eleven ARC projects recommended to him, all in the Humanities, including four from literary studies. The actions of the government reveal that it is committed to defunding Australia’s literary culture by overriding academic autonomy and determining what kinds of knowledge can and cannot be pursued. This is especially ironic given its recent campaign to defend freedom of speech on Australia’s campuses.

Blocking literary grants not only negates a central tenet of academic freedom – that truth be pursued without interference from the state – it degrades Australia’s cultural fabric. Australia is home to the world’s most ancient enduring literary tradition: the song cycles of our First Nations people. Literary representations have always shaped and influenced who we are or might be and have done so for every culture on the planet across humanity’s history. Understanding this rich fabric of representations is critical to our respectful global citizenship and our own self-understanding.

Starving literary research projects of essential funds, terminating literary careers prematurely, and censoring Australia’s inveterate love of storytelling might make good copy in the Murdoch press, but it hits and hurts an element that allows our culture to thrive. For millennia, any society worth more than the sum of its toiling parts has embodied its values in images, stories, characters, monuments, and songs, which lift the monotony of history into a dimension worthy of human contemplation. That result is called literature, and without it, how would we speak to the past, inhabit the present, or project ourselves thoughtfully into the future?

Australians are buying books in record numbers, book clubs spring up everywhere with the rootless tenacity of orchids, English literature is a key subject in all our schools, and enrolments in tertiary literature courses are resilient despite new fee structures designed to penalise Humanities subjects. Without sustained investment in the institutions and frameworks within which intelligent and informed discussion can take place, however, this stubborn national commitment to literature is being asphyxiated.

We, the undersigned, categorically denounce the ongoing interference in our national research council’s independent processes and call on the minister immediately to reinstate the defunded projects and commit to legislating the complete independence of the ARC from government interference and censorship. We also insist on an end to an ill-defined use of ‘national interest’ as a justification for intervention. All political parties should refrain from treating literary studies or the humanities more generally as pawns to be used for political purposes. Literature lasts longer than governments, longer than parties, longer than electoral cycles. The intellectual ferment caused by its discussion and criticism lasts longer, and lifts us higher, than any media release.
